"I almost drowned," recalls PCG (Philippine Coast Guard) Guardsman Nicolas Sanico of an afternoon he went fishing with a small crew on a bangka.

"The boat had sprung a leak. We took off our shirts and stuffed them into the hole, hoping for the rescuers to arrive on time."

He was still in high school then.

When he was in Grade 5, the price of rice had doubled. His father Romulo, a construction worker, walked 20 kilometers daily because he could not afford the fare. His brothers took up construction, too. Even then, the family's combined income did not suffice to feed them all.
